As flames tore through a single-storey house in Pinedale, Eight Mile Rock Monday (May 4) evening, concerned family members on the scene made frantic calls to everyone they knew, attempting to locate the lone male occupant of the residence.

As the blaze continued to crumple the wooden structure shortly before midnight, neighbors and the crowd gathered were also worried as the homeowner's, (known as James) location remained a mystery.

Neighbors became irate, expressing their displeasure at what they claimed was the slow response and arrival of fire brigade officials. "We called them so long ago, when the fire could have been extinguished," shouted a female at the scene.

A male noted, "And they are coming without water!"
