Quiet sports contributor Devin Francis passes on

There are those journalists, from various eras, whose works for one reason or the other, result in them being very well known.

Then, there are the ones who are just as passionate about what they do, just as dedicated, extremely professional, but somehow move through their media careers, sort of under the radar.

That is the case generally, because of their quiet, unassuming nature.

Devin Francis was one such. Having observed him from the very beginning to the end of his tenure in our fraternity, I can speak to his noble character and to his propensity to simply handle his workload quietly, but with great efficiency.

In 2004, after more than about a decade of no interaction, Devin and I reunited as colleagues in Athens, Greece, on the scene of the Olympic Games of that year. He was representing the Nassau Guardian, and the Bahamas Olympic Association (now Committee) had solicited my service to coordinate the Bahamian media.

I was also associated with Jones Communication at the time and had committed to coverage for the Journal newspaper and Love 97 Radio. It got hectic for me at times, because of the necessity to ensure that all of the needs of the Bahamian media personnel were met and at the same time, having to collect/process newspaper and radio material.

My memory of Devin is quite fond, particularly in how he gladly accepted the role I played for the BOA on that occasion and how he, out of the goodness of his heart, was prepared to update me regarding the activities of Team Bahamas that might not have been passed on to the media center.

I recall that whenever Devin saw me enter the Olympic Media Center, he would be approachable, just in case I had missed a development in training, etc. regarding Team Bahamas.

Because of the connection to me from the time his career began, Devin bypassed the normal barrier between competing media agencies. That sums up Devin Francis. He was an accommodating and kind individual.

As fate would have it, four years later, I was once again in the Nassau Guardian family, as Associate Editor. Devin had changed portfolios and was one of the night editors. Upon my return to the Nassau Guardian, I brought the Sports Scope column back into the mix. Sports Scope has a long tradition, started in 1967 by the late Sports Editor and subsequent Guardian Editor Leon Turnquest and I. Devin at one time, carried on the Sports Scope tradition.

Fast forward to 2008, he was positioned along with fellow night editor Terrence Murrell to monitor, among all reading material earmarked for publication, the Sports Scope column. Thus the occasions were many over the last 10 years when Devin and I interacted about sports.

Although with another responsibility, his passion ran deep for sports. We had discussions and sometimes, debates on certain national sports issues. Devin had a sound sports mind. With his passing, the nation has lost yet another solid supporter of the national sports program.

I am indeed proud to have had the pleasure of knowing Devin and working with him through the years.

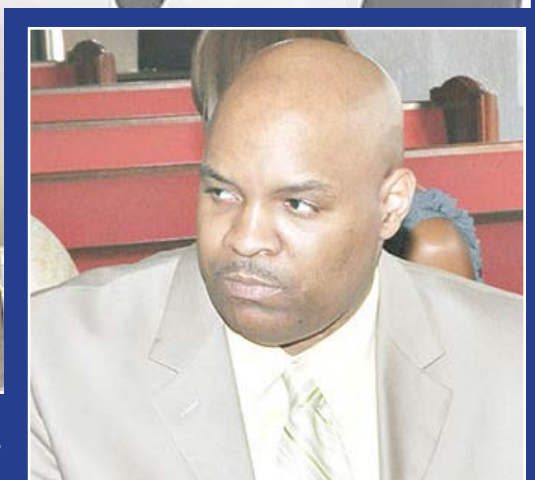

May his soul forever rest in peace!

I extend condolences to his immediate family and friends.

The Grand Bahama Junior Open was successful with two winners emerging: Grand Bahama Junior Open Champion, Saketh Hegde, and “Capture the Flag” winner (Ashley Michel).

Saketh Hegde emerged as the Grand Bahama Junior Open carding scores of 79-79. The weather conditions were favorable, and the golfers in the 18 & Under division made it an exciting event. Capture The Flag

Every event, we have tournament flags, which the kids sign. At the end of the event, the lowest scorer for the event takes home one of the flags. One flag is held for the event sponsor, and the final flag is retained by the Fourteen Clubs Golf Academy and The Front 9.

Capturing the Event Flag with a score of 82-76 was Ashley Michel. This is her third flag for
